

Classifieds platforms are built for the seller and the transaction. The buyer gets a keyword box. That is the gap vindje is built in.

Observations from the industry. From public sources. Company-reported and review-site figures are labelled, because neither is a representative sample.

Search matches keywords, not descriptions

It needs the Dutch noun a seller typed. Attributes are optional, so size and included parts cannot be filtered. Marktplaats publishes anti-stuffing rules. [15]

Sold prices are not published anywhere

Unlike eBay, no Dutch platform shows what comparable items went for, and auction ads put an opening bid in the price position.

Platform investment goes to sellers

eBay now builds a listing from photographs alone. Buyer-side tooling across the industry is a keyword box and paid placement. [29]

Complaints concentrate on trust, not relevance

Fraud surviving reports, protection charged either way, no route to a human, bans after registration. Self-selected sample. [9][10] [11]

Fraud is the buyer's main exposure

CBS: purchase fraud hit 7% of people 15+ in 2024, up from 5.6% in 2022, ahead of every other online fraud type. [16]

Category share can move in four years

Reporting on CMA analysis puts Vinted at 50 to 60% of UK C2C apparel in 2025, from 5 to 10% in 2021, on free listing and one category. [25]

Fee incidence has shifted to the buyer

Marktplaats charges the buyer for protection, Vinted charges sellers nothing, and eBay dropped UK private seller fees in 2024. [13][27][28]

Solved trust was solved operationally

Avito holds funds and moves goods. Zhuanzhuan closed unmediated C2C in 2025, citing disputes and margins, and kept inspection. [36][47]

The engagement leaders are not search products

Xianyu reports 209M monthly actives across 1.3M interest groups. Whatnot reports doubling volume on live auctions. [39] [33]

A paid buyer-side layer already exists

Three Dutch services sell faster listing alerts at €6.95 to €10.95 a month, and one advertises model-based filtering. [21][22][23]

The direction, and what vindje should stand for. A layer on supply that already exists, on the buyer's side of it.

One

Paid by the buyer

Platform revenue comes from sellers and transactions, so nobody in this market is paid to tell a buyer that nothing here fits.

No seller tools. No paid placement.

Two

Shows its work

Every match gives its reason. Every rejection is counted. Every price verdict names the comparables it rests on.

No silent ranking. No hidden placement.

Three

Silent when unsure

Fraud is the buyer's main exposure here, so a confident wrong price costs more than an empty state.

No guess in place of missing data.

Ten hypotheses to test. Each states its test and the result that kills it. H1 gates the others, so it runs first.

	Hypothesis	How it is tested	Falsified if
H1	Match quality is already good enough to build on	50 hand-labelled wishes across five categories, run against one frozen listing snapshot, reporting precision, recall and cost per search	Precision below 70%
H2	Constraint-rich wishes are where the value sits	Parse and store the constraint count per search, then compare listing views per search across constraint bands over four weeks of live traffic	No positive relationship
H3	The stated reason is what makes a result usable	Equal-split A/B, reason line shown against hidden, decided at a sample fixed before the test starts	No positive difference
H4	Disclosing what was hidden builds trust rather than doubt	A/B on the "43 listings hidden, here is why" panel, measured on 7 day return rate, not on clicks	The disclosure arm returns less
H5	A saved search turns a one-time visit into a habit	Offer a saved search at the end of results. Measure creation rate, then 7 day return for creators against one-time searchers	Creation under 10%
H6	Buyers will pay for a saved search	Free tier of two searches at 15 minute checks, paid tier at the price the market already charges. Measure conversion among users with an active search over three weeks	Conversion under 2%
H7	A price verdict changes what buyers do	A/B verdict against no verdict on seller-contact clicks, plus one in-product question to users who saw it. Direction is uncertain: a calibrated verdict should also prevent some purchases	Neither contacts nor stated decisions move
H8	Risk flags can be made accurate enough to publish	Run rules plus model inspection over listings users reported as suspicious and over a hand-labelled clean set. Report recall and false positives separately	False positives above 20%
H9	Buyers who do not write Dutch are a distinct segment	Split engagement and 30 day retention by input language, and interview five non-Dutch speakers to read the quantitative result	The two groups behave alike
H10	Dutch long-tail pages acquire buyers at a workable cost	Publish 200 constraint pages and 25 valuation pages, measure organic sessions and saved-search conversion at day 90, with a €500 category-intent ads test as the comparison	Under 1,000 sessions a month, or over €3 per saved search
